SOVIET RUSSIA TELLS OBJECTIONS OF CONFERENCE

Against Chosen President and Place of Disarmament
Conference

INFORMS EIGHT NATIONS

Does Not Wish to Retain Geneva as the Headquarters

MOSCOW, Jan. 15.—(INS)—The Soviet Government informed eight foreign nations today that the U. S. S. R. objected strictly to the chosen president and the place of the future world disarmament conference.

Soviet ambassadors in Great Britain, Germany, Poland, Italy, Norway, Persia, France and Japan advised the respective Governments that Moscow, in view of the attitude of Jonkhoeur Dr. Jan Loudon of Holland during the preliminary disarmament conference here recently, found it impossible to view him as the presiding officer of the forthcoming gathering.

Jonkhoeur Loudon's "discourtesy to Soviet representatives" was particularly stressed by the communication. The ambassadors further informed the foreign governments that Russia objects strenuously to retaining Geneva, Switzerland, as headquarters of the League of Nations because of the alleged anti-Soviet atmosphere prevailing there.

The third part of the communication declared that the Soviet Government is opposed to the selection for the presidency of a representative from any country not having normal diplomatic relations with all League participants, or where the attitude is unfavorable to complete or partial disarmament. The conference, it pointed out, should be held on the territory of some League member.

Attracts Many

By "The Stroller"

During the past few days many of Bristol's male population, old and young, have been trekking for big game in fancy.

All and the enjoyment is due to the prowess and thoughtfulness of Dr. H. Doyle Webb and Frank Pfeiffer.

The two moose heads, result of the straight aim of these two residents of Bristol while on a delightful gunning trip to Quebec a few months ago, are now in the display windows of Spencer & Sons' store, Mill and Radcliffe streets.

And lined up on both sides of the windows at practically every hour of the day are men and boys, numbering in the hundreds, who wish they might have the opportunity to try their aim.

Many, after standing in admiration for several minutes, have left the spot, resolving to improve their aim in the small game hunting grounds hereabouts, and in the meantime save their pennies.

FISH AND GAME ASSOCIATION MEETS

Election of officers, review of the activities of the association and hearing reports of the various committees was the business which came before the annual meeting of the Bristol Fish & Game Protective Association, when the members assembled in annual session in the meeting rooms in the Coleman Building.

There was a large attendance and much interest was manifested in the meeting.

Officers were elected as follows for the ensuing year:
President, Frank Crobe; vice-president, Edward Pickering, Jr.; secretary, Ralph Ratcliffe; treasurer, George P. Bailey.

Board of Directors: Jacob Schesch, C. G. Clark, Edward Pickering, John B. Schmidt, Ralph Bruden.

The president announced the appointment of Thomas Scott as chairman of the Game Committee and stated that he will appoint the other members of this committee and also of the Fish Committee at a later date.

Joint Birthday Anniversary Celebration Held Here

A joint birthday anniversary party was held on Saturday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Voit, of North Radcliffe street.

The affair was in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Voit's daughter, Helen's, seventh birthday anniversary, and of George Carter, a friend's, eleventh birthday anniversary.

The rooms were gaily trimmed with pale green and pale yellow decorations. Streamers reaching from the central lighting fixture, in the dining room, rayed to the places, at the table, of the different boys, while those of pale yellow were furlled to the places of the girls.

Games were enjoyed and prizes awarded to Mac and Orin Ross for skill in planning the tail on the donkey, while Jack Randall and Lois Carter were rewarded for their prowess in the peanut hunt.

The invitation list included: Jack and Fred Randall, Richard and Mary Cooper, Orin and Mac Ross, Harriet Eddleman, Jean French, Wallace Cornell, and George, Harold and Lois Carter. The children enjoyed a merry afternoon.

INCREASED "GAS" TAX NOT TO BE CONSIDERED

This Particular Question Not To Be Among Penna's
Legislative Problems

LONG PENDING ITEM

By William B. Brown
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
HARRISBURG, Jan. 15.—(INS)—Though many controversial questions will face the Pennsylvania legislature when it reconvenes here January 19 to get down to business after its organization recess, an increased gasoline tax proposal will not be among them, leaders of the assembly agree.

During the present administration, raising of the gasoline tax proved a troublesome problem in both sessions of the legislature, especially in 1929 and the fight on the 4-cent gas tax bill was considered the high light of that session. In the preceding session the tax was increased from two to three cents with the provision that the third cent should be added only temporarily.

Decision of Governor John S. Fisher to make a new high record for road construction during his term of office was accompanied by the determination to make the three-cent tax permanent and add an additional one cent for at least a one year period.

Governor Fisher was convinced that the additional cent was necessary to follow the program he had in mind for the last two years of his administration. Organizations of automobile owners and thousands of individuals were just as determined they would submit to no more taxation, and legislators found themselves between the opposing forces of administration pressure and the voters back home.

Then, into the fight, entered a factor on which legislative leaders now predict a paucity of legislation this session designed to increase gasoline taxes.

The factor was the active drive begun by Samuel S. Lewis, of York, then state treasurer, and named to be Secretary of Highways in the new cabinet, to block at every turn the governor's plan for a tax increase. With every force and figure at his command, Lewis attempted to show that additional revenue for the Department of Highways was unnecessary.

So voluminous were the statistical exhibits he marshalled to support his arguments that the Senate roads committee granted a special hearing at which he was asked to present his views. After listening closely to (Continued on Page 3)

TWO ARE ARRESTED IN HIT-RUN CASE WHICH IS FATAL

Trenton Man Taken Into Custody
After Investigation

VICTIM IS DEAD

Accident Occurred Below
Langhorne On the Lincoln
Highway

Two arrests have been made in Trenton of men who are said to be responsible for a fatal "hit-and-run" accident which occurred along the Lincoln Highway, two miles below Langhorne.

The men were taken into custody in Trenton last night and gave the names of John Kovleski, 193 Humboldt street, and George Nelson, 338 Ferry street. The arrests were made by Sergeant William Stanley, of Trenton, after Patrolmen Schnader and Joseph Hoffelder, of the Langhorne State Highway Patrol, conducted an investigation.

Andrew Koleski, 21, 23 Turpin street, Trenton, was walking along the Lincoln Highway, two miles below Langhorne, when he was struck by a speeding car and hurled quite a distance. Benjamin Lehman, of New York, a truck driver, took the victim to the Truerry Emergency Hospital, and he was rushed from there to the Frankford Hospital for an operation. His death occurred yesterday from a fractured skull and internal injuries.

Members of the Highway Patrol secured the license number of the automobile alleged to have struck Koleski. Checking up with the Motor Vehicle Department they learned that the plates were issued to Fred Lambert, of Hamilton Township, and further investigation is said to have revealed the car had been stolen from South Warren street, Trenton, early Tuesday night.

Authorities claim Kovleski was in the car at the time it figured in the tragedy. Both men were turned over to the Highway Patrol and taken to the Langhorne barracks for questioning.

Eli Barnfield Opens New Market Here Today

Bristol's newest and one of the most modern grocery, vegetable and meat markets will open its doors to the public today, at the corner of Wood and Walnut streets.

The market is the last word in modernization. The shelving is arranged so that the merchandise can be displayed to the best advantage. The electric refrigeration system is used in counters, meat cases and in the meat storage box. The electric lights are installed in the most advantageous places.

Eli Barnfield owns and will operate the new store. Mr. Barnfield has had a wide experience in the meat and grocery business, having learned the butchering trade as an apprentice and after conducting a store of his own at the corner of Bath and Mifflin streets, for years.

"As part of the Unity chain of stores, this market will give the thrifty housewife a greater opportunity to get nationally known merchandise of quality at the lowest prices at all times. This co-operative organization plan enables the community grocer like myself to furnish you with superior quality food at real economy prices," said Mr. Barnfield.

Daily deliveries will be made in the new Chevrolet truck which will be operated by Thomas Ryan, an experienced man in this line.

PRESS "GAG" LAW DOOMED!

Minnesota's vicious newspaper "gag" law will do well if it survives the present session of the state legislature. It has been dealt a mortal blow in the recommendation of Governor Floyd B. Olson that it be repealed as "unsafe." Such a recommendation from him is doubly significant because he was the prosecuting attorney who obtained an injunction under the law suppressing publication of a newspaper. It was this test case in which the Minnesota supreme court upheld the constitutionality of the statute and which has now brought the question before the highest tribunal in the land.

Governor Olson attacks the obnoxious law on the grounds that "the freedom of speech and of the press should remain inviolate, and any law which constitutes an entering wedge into that inviolability is unsafe."

Col. Robert R. McCormick, leader in the fight of newspaper publishers against the gag law, scores an effective point for repeal in pointing out that this is the first attempt of a legislature to gag the press in so drastic a manner since the foundation of the union.

Here is another instance where constitutionality does not save a statute, where a law may be valid but highly vulnerable, where the remedy is worse than the disease. It is another case where a legislature has jumped first and investigated afterward.

There have been newspapers so scandalous, so malicious and so defamatory as to demand censorship or suppression, but there are too many men on the bench who cannot be trusted with a discretionary power which would permit them to suppress legitimate criticism of corruption in the courts or in other branches of the government, to let judges dictate what newspapers may or may not print.

IT WAS BOUND TO HAPPEN

Invariably when rich men, or those poor because of bad investments, die, the inventories of their estates include a list of worthless securities of varying lengths. Usually they are appraised at $1 per block, irrespective of par values or purchasing price, but they bring nothing to the heirs but so much engraved paper.

There are exceptions, and an exceptional exception has just received newspaper recognition, or—which is more likely—has been discovered by the reporters.

Many years ago J. Ogden Armour invested $3,000,000 in an oil-cracking process in which he saw possibilities of making millions. Before the process could be placed in profitable use, post-war losses wiped out the bulk of his wealth and, following his death in 1927, his creditors passed over the oil-cracking process stock as valueless.

Suddenly these worthless securities became valuable, so valuable that they have just paid Armour's widow $8,000,000 in addition to a handsome profit for months prior to the sale. Had she burned them or disposed of them on the "gilt-edge" market for a few pennies she would have been out these millions.

"FOREST LOVE" by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

Nancy Hollenbeck, young, vibrant and beautiful, becomes lyrical toward love when she gives up Mat Tully at her mother's request because he is poor. She encourages the attentions of Jack Beamer, wealthy married man, who, enamored of Nancy, wishes to divorce his wife. On a mountain trip, Nancy falls in love with a handsome ranger, Roger Decatur. Leaving her chaperones, the rich Porters, Nancy, after a violent but brief courtship, secretly marries Roger. Her folks at home wonder at her continued absence. In Reno on their honeymoon, Roger pleads with Nancy to write her mother of their marriage. Mrs. Hollenbeck learns of the return of Mrs. Porter. Doubts assail Nancy as she spends long, lonely days in Roger's rough mountain cabin. Mrs. McKimmons, a neighboring ranger's wife, invites Nancy to visit her. Nancy is troubled as she pictures herself growing to be like her. When Roger plans to go on a trip, Nancy begs him not to go. Nancy is so lonely after Roger goes, she decides she can stand it no longer.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE storekeeper's wife met her on the road two hours later, driving Roger's battered roadster with reckless speed. There were bags and suitcases piled on the seat beside her.

She thought of mentioning it to Mr. Decatur when he and Mr. McKimmons, back a little early, dropped in for a sandwich and cup of coffee Friday noon. But when she decided, like as not he'd think it was none of his business!

So she said nothing, and Roger, on his tired horse, jogged on home. He whistled as he came up the trail, and he called, "Nan-cy—yip, yoooo!"

Deserted

There was no answer, and on the kitchen table, laid with the fresh checked cloth, he found her note.

She had got to worrying about her mother, and thought she had better go home for a visit, she wrote. She would try to break the news to the family, and in the meantime if he wrote he was to be sure to address her as Nancy Hollenbeck, and not to wire or phone long distance because anything like that gave the old-fashioned family such a scare. She would leave the car at the hotel near the station. It was signed, "Love, Nancy."

Roger Decatur looked around the neat, bare kitchen. She had left everything in order. Even washed the frying pan . . . and she hated cold bacon grease so.

He thought of another note in a neat kitchen . . . the one his mother, the ex-dance hall girl left for his father when the loneliness got her, and she went away, never to come back any more.

He walked heavily into the bedroom. The silver toilet things were gone from the pine dresser. The spilled powder, the cigarette stubs, all the dear untidiness of Nancy . . . gone. Her dresses . . . even the scuffed brown boots she used to keep under her bed.

Maggie, the horse whinnied impatiently. She pawed at the dust and whinnied again.

Roger did not hear her. He just sat there on the army cot that had been Nancy's, with his head in his hands.

Nancy had been home a day! She was lying on the davenport in the living room, listening to Lou strumming on the old square piano, and mama retelling the latest gossip.

"You did perfectly right to leave them," mama was saying for the tenth time, "and I for one never want to see or hear of those Porters again. If they ever call here, I'm not home, do you hear me, Louise?"

sweeping her cheek made her look oddly pale. "I knew the attitude wouldn't agree with her," mama thought, thrilling to her beauty even while she worried about her health. "This is the last time I let her go visiting any strange girls! The very idea!"

Fondly she reached for her shawl to cover Nancy who seemed to have dozed off, poor child. Tenderly she spread it over the sleeping girl.

"There!" she said, aloud. Nancy's hand lay on the pillow. Mrs. Hollenbeck stared at it, her eyes bulging.

"Louise—Nancy's hand—she's—she's—" mama faltered, pointing.

Guilty Conscience

Louise jumped up from the piano at the very moment that Nancy with a little cry sat bolt upright and stared at them in horror. "What—what—" she began, almost afraid to look. She COULDN'T—she couldn't have left on her wedding ring. . . . she took it off long before she got home. But what else could make mama . . .

At last her eyes turned downward. She saw her hand, innocent of rings. "Well! What IS the matter?" she cried.

Mama sniffed, but continued to point. "Your hands, Nancy . . . they're terrible. All chapped and your finger nails broken a piece. Like that. Like a washer-woman. What did you do to ruin your pretty nails?"

"I went to the High Sierras on what was practically a camping trip. I rode horseback without gloves."

"But, dear, you had gloves—those nice doekies—"

"I KNOW. Can't I have a good time without thinking of my finger nails for five minutes? We made fires outside, and broiled bacon and . . . oh, you don't understand!"

"No. When I was a girl I didn't have to ruin my nails and spoil all my lovely clothes to have a good time. I had too much common sense. The dear mother who gave them to me—"

Nancy sprang to her feet, quivering. "Mama, if you start that again I'll scream. I can't stand it, I tell you! I'll go away again. I'll—I'll—"

She broke down and cried then, and Lou put comforting arms around her, cooing, "Go upstairs and lie down. 'You're all tired out still. Don't be silly! Mama doesn't mean anything!"

Up in her old room again with the big windows open and the scent of honeysuckle and verberna coming up from the garden, Nancy relaxed a little. The wind was cool, and the old downfilled comforter with the faded blue and pink silkoline roses, filled her with a pleasant warmth. After all, this was home. She belonged here.

Why should she let mama's fussing upset her? Lou was right, it was perfectly meaningless. No doubt about their being overjoyed to have her back . . . they had almost smothered her when she got in last night . . . even papa, who tried to be dignified, had furtively wiped his eyes. It WAS good to be home.

She sighed and snuggled deeper into the pillows. Her eyes closed. For the first time in forty-eight hours, Nancy was asleep.

"That high attitude," mama decided. "It never agreed with me either. I remember that Summer I went south when I was a young girl. Crossing the mountains I fainted dead away. Dead away. It was weeks before I was myself again. Doctor McGillicuddy—he was—THE fashionable physician in those days, ordered sherry and egg . . . or was it sulphur and molasses?"

Nancy, you wouldn't take just a LITTLE—

"NO THANKS! Nor any raw eggs either. Of course, if we had some sherry—"

Mama's little face puckered into a thousand wrinkles. "Nancy, mama knows you're joking, but you mustn't SAY things like that. It sounds common. I won't have it!"

Nancy grinned and lit another cigarette. She had been home a week now, and her nerves were vanishing. She was no longer irritable, inclined to tears.

May Belle Craig and Helen Heflinger, pushing in Helen's smart little coupe, saw Nancy's head at a window and came in for a moment's gossip.

"My God, how did you stay so long with the terrible Porters? May Belle shrieked, before she was comfortably seated. "Mother moi Mrs. Porter, she says she's a mess. And you and the two younger females stayed alone at Reno?"

"Never heard of such a thing! Naughty, naughty!"

"With the Porter girls nothing naughty is possible."

"Yes, my dear—but WHY? What was the ATTRACTION? Mama, poor, simple minded soul is BURNING with curiosity to find out what you were up to. She almost CRIED because she didn't get a chance to question the aged Porter. With her pure mind she thought of Jack Beamer, of course. Nancy, dear, DID you go to his Nevada ranch?"

"Of course not! I never saw him!"

Third Degree

"Well, you know all the old cats talked about the way he carried on over you at the house party, and he left the same day you did—but, my dear, if it wasn't Jack who WAS it? You can't tell me you were on a pure sight-seeing tour with two other females—"

"Yes, tell us!" Helen begged. Her florid face was flushed with excitement. Romance went straight to Helen's head. The Hollenbeck girls had always been sorry for her, in spite of her lovely clothes, her rich, doting father, her name in the society columns. The men didn't like her. Hostesses were always prodding eligible young men: "Dance this with Helen Heflinger, there's a dear! She's really a good dancer—truly she is!"

"Well, there was a good-looking ranger, whom we bumped into everywhere we went. Good-looking! Something out of a movie."

"A ranger! Next to the Royal Mounted they're simply the most exciting . . . but you always were lucky, Nancy Hollenbeck!"

"Nonsense, May Belle. It was not anything . . . much. I'll bet you have been up to much more mischief. Has Gil proposed yet?"

"As if I'd tell!" But May Belle wriggled and blushed.

"And Helen, too," Nancy went on gracefully, admiring her own tact. Helen loved to be accused of misbehaving.

"Oh, just a wee Summer flirtation with Mat Tully. He has a crush on me, but I'm not so thrilled. Of course, everyone is noticing him because he's supposed to be so brilliant, but still have the Royal Mounted I met the Summer Dad and I went to the Rockies—"

"Come on, Helen. You won't have any dinner if you don't move. Bye, Nancy—bye, Lou—see you soon. Don't you dare forget the Venetian Carnival!"

Nancy drew a long sigh when they were gone.

"Did you hear what May Belle said about her mother, Lou? Just like her to make trouble." The pucker came back between her eyebrows. "Mrs. Porter doesn't like me, either; she'd say things if she could. . . . you know I really was with the ranger a lot. . . . you don't think she'd go to see Aunt Ellie? Still Aunt Ellie has no telephone, and that deaf maid never hears the doorknob. . . . Lou, you don't think she would?"

Section Asked To Help With Red Cross Funds

ty-one drought-stricken States," Colonel McFadden said in his message to the branch chairmen. "Will you kindly appoint a committee today to solicit and collect contributions in your branch territory for the Starvation Relief Fund and advise Chapter Headquarters of the names of those appointed? Washington Headquarters is relying on this Chapter to do its full part."

In the message which Judge Payne sent to Colonel McFadden he urged "the most vigorous possible campaign because the success of our efforts will be regarded as a test of the Red Cross by the President and by the entire nation—we must not fail!"

Judge Payne added that "a minimum of ten million dollars is needed to prevent untold suffering and actual starvation by thousands of families. Pollution of the water supply caused by dying cattle has added to the winter hardships in some sections. President Hoover in his proclamation, has urged immediate and generous response. I am confident that your people will not fail to meet their share of this humanitarian need."

Colonel McFadden summoned the Board of Directors of the local Red Cross to an immediate emergency session, and the headquarters of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter at 2100 Delancey St., Phila., was designated receiving post for contributions to the Red Cross Starvation Relief Committee. All checks should be drawn to the order of the American Red Cross Starvation Relief.

"The President's call to the Nation for ten million dollars to avert terrible privation and starvation from destitute farmers and families in the 21 drought-stricken States comes only after the exhaustion of all the disaster reserve of the American National Red Cross," Colonel McFadden stated. "With this reserve gone, more money has to be raised or the women and children and the aged must be abandoned to their fate and left without food or means of obtaining it. We must choose between."

"The Red Cross is the only organized medium through which all these sufferers can be reached, and is the only medium through which all the money can be raised. It is not charity but the unwritten law of civilized beings that helpless victims of disaster beyond their control must be helped as an obligation of humanity.

"Only the Mississippi overflow in 1927 has exceeded in destruction the drought of last summer. The absence of flood or storm or fire deprives it of some feature that usually accompanies great disasters, but this is the more difficult because it is not all visible to the naked eye or to the imagination.

"All the money contributed is forwarded to Washington headquarters; the small expense attending collecting does not come out of the contribution. You are giving to the Starvation Relief Fund, not to the American Red Cross which is itself the biggest contributor."

Association Meets

hundred and forty-four cotton tail rabbits, together with ninety-six rabbits that were received from the Board of Game Commissioners and which were just recently liberated.

"It is the hope of our committee that this restocking of our depleted covers, which was made possible by our increased membership roll, and which we trust may be increased through additional consignment received through the courtesy of the Board of Game Commissioners will result in improved hunting conditions when the season of 1931 opens.

"Your committee desires to express its appreciation of the assistance rendered by the members of the Association in liberating and distributing the game promptly upon its receipt. All of which is respectfully submitted.

The fish committee reports that during the year 1930, it received from the Pennsylvania Department of Fisheries, 20 cans of Wayne County Yellow Perch Fry, and twenty-one cans of Small Mouth Bass.

It was also received from the Federal Fisheries five cans of Small Mouth Bass.

Nail of the yellow perch were placed in Silver Lake, Bristol, as the condition of this water, in the opinion of the committee, was in better shape than any other nearby waters which are open to fishing and with suitable environment for this species of fish.

"All of the twenty-six cans of small mouth bass were placed in the Neshaminy Creek in the stretch of water lying between Bridgetown and the Railroad Bridge known as the eight arch bridge, which is a few miles from Langhorne. It was the opinion of the committee that these fish should be placed well up stream in the Neshaminy and not near the lower end of the Creek where they might easily leave and migrate up the Delaware River.

"The small mouth bass ranged in size from two inches to about the legal size. It is estimated that the shipments contained at least two thousand bass.

"Your Committee has received notice from the Pennsylvania Fish Commission that the method of stocking our streams will be changed beginning with the year 1931. Applications for fish will be discontinued and instead the Commission will make a study of the various streams and will stock them direct from the hatchery. This will eliminate the waste of fish caused by reckless planting by the inexperienced, such as placing small mouth bass in dormant ponds and large mouth bass in swift running water.

"Your Committee heartily approves of the new system and if proper investigations are made by the Commission, we believe our streams will benefit thereby.

Increased "Gas" Tax Not To Be Considered

Lewis' arguments, Senate opponents of the measure could muster only 12 votes against the bill. In the House, 73 members had previously voted against it. In both houses, the major opposition against an administration had been recorded.

Lewis always has contended that many phases of highway construction and financing were badly managed. He will now have an opportunity to put his theories into practice, legislative leaders hold, and they believe that it would be difficult for him to reverse completely his arguments of several years and go before the legislature as favoring increased highway revenue from any source.

In addition, Governor-elect Gifford Pinchot asserted repeatedly during his campaign that an increase in the gasoline tax is unnecessary. He promised also to reduce the fees for automobile registration and for drivers' licenses.

Without administration pressure, it is doubted that any member of the legislature would sponsor, let alone actively support, a measure always so unpopular with the great majority of motor owners.

Members of the general assembly, who believe they face trouble making measures enough, are relieved to think that the question of an increased gasoline tax is not one of them.

Helpful Advice to Girls

By NANCY LEE.

DEAR NANCY LEE:

I would have you advise me in a trying problem. I would like to have a party either birthday or just a simple informal party for nothing special. I would like to know how and in what manner to invite my guests. There are two or three boys I do not know how to approach either by note or speech. It isn't because I don't know them very well, because I do. They are all school friends. The girls will be very easy to manage. I have never given a party by myself as I am only 15, in my second year of high school.

SIS DEAR: I am sure that your friends will appreciate a nice get-together party at your home and trust that it will be the beginning of many happy occasions for your friends. After you have received the permission of your mother to go ahead, sit down and make out a list of those whom you know well enough to invite. Write nice little informal notes asking your friends to come to your party. Consult your mother if she wants to arrange a little dinner, or whether she would prefer it to be an after-dinner affair with light refreshments such as sandwiches, cakes, salads, tea, and coffee. Go to a store and ask for some simple games guaranteed to keep a party happy. Get the radio going, tell each of your guests that they must sing, dance, recite, talk or do something to amuse you all. If there is a good pianist in the group, arrange for some chorus-singing. It is a sure success at any party.

DEAR NANCY LEE:

I have been reading your advice to girls and I'm hoping you can help me.

I am 15 years of age. I have been asked for many dates. I had to refuse because my mother objects, and says I'm too young to go with the boys. Am I too young?

I am thanking you in advance and remain your reader.

ANN.

ANN: Yes, you are too young. Be glad that you have a mother who is so solicitous for your welfare. I have received countless letters from girls telling me of things that have happened to them solely because they had mothers who were entirely indifferent to the actions and behavior of their girls. Wait a little bit longer, and have friendships of which your mother approves.

DEAR NANCY LEE:

Is it improper for a girl and boy to attend a semi-formal school dance when the girl wears formal clothes and the boy his street clothes? Please answer this soon.

BOOTS.

BOOTS: If you know that the boy is to wear his street clothes why not be truthful and kind and wear a little informal frock of lace or chiffon? The charming Sunday night frocks now available should nicely fill the bill and you will have a happier evening if you wear such a frock.

Those Gloom Spreaders Of Life

"It's Just Their Way"—but It Isn't a Good Way at All,
Thinks Winifred Black

By WINIFRED BLACK

BLIND—stone blind—not a ray of light—not even a flash of lightning—that was what was coming to her. The woman knew it—for the doctor said so and if he didn't know—who did?

He could have helped the woman if she had come to him a year ago—the doctor said.

But now—the doctor shrugged his shoulders and looked resigned and more than a little irritated.

People were so stupid—they abused their eyes and they ate the wrong things and lived the wrong way and then they were surprised if they dropped dead or went blind or something.

It was really too provoking. And the woman went out into the street—she did not know that she was walking—but she was.

She couldn't see, she couldn't think, she could just ache from head to foot.

The Optimist.

"I will go home and make my will," said the woman to herself.

"I won't live—I can't live blind. How will I know where I am or who is standing beside me, or whether the faces of my friends are smiling or sad?"

"I can't even read the paper, and just think yesterday I grumbled because my new dress didn't suit me."

But just as the woman started to make her will a friend came to see her, and the friend said:

"Why not get the opinion of another doctor?"

And so the woman went to another doctor. And the other doctor made a little clicking noise that sounded like "tut, tut," and he said:

"Well, this is rather a serious business, but I think we can manage it. You will have to go on a diet, and you will have to rest your eyes, and I think there is a good deal of hope."

Then the woman told the new doctor what the first doctor had said.

The Black Veil.

"Listen," said the new doctor, "he meant all right. I guess that was just his way."

"I have been through that kind of thing myself. I just came down town the other day. I had recovered from a severe case of infantile paralysis. I was walking with a stick, and I met one of my old professors, a fine man and a good doctor."

"Been in an accident?" said the good doctor.

"I told him about the infantile paralysis, and he said:

"Queer kind of mystery, isn't it? I had a patient not long ago, a man about your age. He got perfectly well, and four weeks later he was stricken down in the street and choked to death with paralysis of the lungs."

"You could imagine how cheerful I felt."

"No; he didn't mean any harm. It was just his way—that's all."

Now I wonder just what ought to happen to men like that.

Men who draw a black veil across the sun and never seem to realize what they are doing.

I ask you.

Why Commute?

Why travel back and forth to your employment, which is here in Bristol, when such desirable dwellings are to be obtained here at such reasonable rents? It will pay any individual to investigate!

Work Where You Live and Live Where You Work.

If you are employed in Bristol you should live here. It will be less expensive and there are numerous other advantages derived from making your home in the town where you are employed.

You will save many hours a year which are now spent in traveling and you will have more time with your family.

The saving in money will also be considerable. Add to that which you are now paying for rent the amount which you spend in traveling back and forth to your employment here. You'll be surprised at the total. Rent a house here at a moderate rental and bank the difference.

Houses.

Comfortable dwellings, well situated and at moderate rents are to be found in that portion of Bristol which is immediately adjacent to the P. R. R. passenger station.

These houses make ideal homes and consist of six rooms with bath.

Conveniences.

They are heated by hot-air furnaces with a direct pipe leading to every room. They are lighted with electricity and are equipped with sewer, municipal water and gas.

Each room is well lighted and yet the space devoted to windows is not excessive.

Front porches are another attractive feature as is also a small rear yard where children can play in safety away from the perils of traffic.

Houses such as these would rent for considerably more in any city, where the conveniences would not surpass those offered here.

BRISTOL A. A. VICTORS IN OPENING CONTEST

By Leon Schiffer
Starting early in the game and steadily increasing its lead, the Bristol A. A. basketball quintet succeeded in winning its initial home game of the season from the Church Farm Alumni by the score of 37-28.

The local squad started its scoring lethargy early in the game when Lake, receiving the ball from Gleason, succeeded in reaping in the first double-decker of the game. The game then took on the aspect of ten men who seemed to have cramped optical illusions, and the remainder of the half was spent vainly in trying for a few extra points. With the ending of the half, the score, which should have been 40-38, was 22-20 in favor of Bristol.

However, the second half was an entirely different story. Starting with Larry David's foul shot in the early part of the third period, the local boys amassed so great a lead that it wasn't even funny.

An interesting point of the game was the clean and clever trick which Townsend, Bristol High School coach and former West Chester center, used in snaring foul shots. The dexterity of this feat rendered him two foul shots, both of which he made.

Lake was high scorer for the local quintet with nine points to his credit, while Lee was high scorer for the visitors with eight points to his honor.

David and Townsend, guard and center, respectively, starred on the defense for the local boys, while Trot, Nicholls, and Lowitz reaped the laurels on the offense.

A fairly large crowd attended the game and was well pleased with the remarkable showing of both teams and the delightful dancing to the enchanting syncopated music after the game.

PAYING public interest in heavyweight boxers has grown so great in his generation that there seems to be all sorts of corruption, suspected and actual, in those "million-dollar-gate" plans which invite politicians, promoters, managers, press agents and their cliques to try to get their fingers in the pie. The business of making a successor to champion Gene Tunney started as soon as he abdicated, more than two years ago. Jack Sharkey seemed logical successor, and he is that despite his low-punching victory over Phil Scott at Miami last February and the single foul punch that gave Schmeling the world's championship when Max was on the verge of defeat after taking a severe boxing lesson from Sharkey last June. Despite erraticism, the Sport Bug rates Sharkey--master boxer and a real slugger at times--as the uncrowned champion.

Despite the set-up nature of most of his victims, this Sport Bug rates Primo Carnera next to Sharkey. We base that rating, in part, on his real slugging match with George Godfrey. It is doubted that any other heavy could have taken the terrific punches Primo took that June night, and he was coming on to win when "Big Gawge" fouled him hard indeed. Primo also gave an inspired Jimmy Maloney a real beating for ten rounds last October, but he lost that Boston decision. He whipped Paulino (as badly as Schmeling did) in Spain recently. He's green yet but improving steadily. Of course, the political "works" seem "in" against the huge Italian (his U. S.

representatives are "on the outs" with the Garden and New York's Boxing Commission), and everything will be done to sidetrack the Ambling Alp or lure him into another "ten-round trap."

Stribling is close to the top by virtue of 1930 knockouts over Otto Von Porat and Phil Scott. More recently, the crude Arthur Dekuh stayed ten rounds with him and "Tuffy" Griffiths all but held him to a draw. Strib is a master boxer, of course, and, if not so prone to injury, he'd be rated on a par at least with Sharkey. The latter was giving Schmeling such a lacing up to the time of that title-tossing foul last June that the best we can rate the technical world's champion is fourth, and we doubt that Max could beat Ernie Schnaf, who looms as a genuine corner, and is No. 5 heavy.
